I refer to the responses to question on notice Nos 2651 and 2851, and ask -

- (1) Given the Gngangara Mound Metering Project has seen roughly 10 percent of the licensed bores on the Gngangara mound be metered, and given that the project found that over the period 2006-07 to 2009-10, a total of 10.9 gegalitres was extracted over the licensed allocation of the bores being metered, is it reasonable to conclude that over the entire mound, extraction of water in excess of licenced allocations during the four years of the project was likely to have been more than 100 gegalitres, in other words, 100 million kilolitres?
- (2) If no to (1), -
 - (a) why not; and
 - (b) what is a more likely estimate, based on the results from the bores that were metered?
- (3) Given the cost of implementing the four-year Gngangara Mound Metering Project was $8.3 million, does the Government believe that these calculations indicate significant potential value-for money to be gained in metering all licenced bores on the mound as a first step to ensuring licenced allocations are not exceeded?
- (4) If no to (3), why not?
- (5) Given the Gngangara Groundwater Areas Allocation Plan, dated November 2009, states that the Department of Water, 'needs to measure actual groundwater use to accurately understand the impacts of abstraction', what are the Government's intentions in regards to rolling out metering to all licenced bores on the Gngangara mound?
- (6) Is data from the meters at the present time still being recorded and collated on an ongoing basis?
- (7) If yes to (6), -
 - (a) by whom; and
 - (b) where is this data being stored?
- (8) If no to (6), given the Gngangara Groundwater Areas Allocation Plan states that data collected through the Metering Project will be used to form the 2012 Gngangara allocation plan, how will any discontinuation of the Metering Project affect the production of the 2012 allocation plan?
- (9) Has a full report on the four-year, $8.3 million Project been written?
- (10) If yes to (9), where is it publicly available?
