I draw my conclusions from personal experience in the United States during the decade of the nineteen sixties*. Legalisation of marijuana and decriminalisation of other hallucinogens will enlighten and edify modern Australian society in dazzling ways. One obvious improvement for Australian Society as a whole will be rapid, enriched contact with Advanced Alien Societies from Other Dimensions of Space-time. You may be unaware of the known fact that Advanced Extra-Terrestrials from Outer Space have proven to be uninterested in communicating with any Earthlings who do not have at least a micro reserve of THC or other hallucinogen in the bloodstream. Consequent upon the legalisation of cannabis we can expect UFO sightings to proliferate and marvellous abductions and other intense interactions resulting in bonds and amities that will "blow society's mind".

As Cannabis becomes legally available more and more young people (including those young-in-spirit) will abandon traditional (read "square") ethics and morals of past centuries and, unrestrained by old-fashioned "proper" restrictions, will express an entirely new relationship to social reality based upon entitlement. This new licence will initially seem like anti-authoritarianism and anti-establishmentarianism but eventually it will prove to be far more profound: an actual rejection of all authority including senseless government clout.

Legalisation will also markedly increase awareness of the hidden dangers in modern living. These dangers include invisible drones, hidden surveillance equipment in bushes along footpaths which can actually track us walkers, anti-gravity machines in US military bunkers, and thought-control devices hidden in street lamps and shopping centres. The oppressive forces arrayed by the One Percent to control and victimise the Ninety Nine Percent are, of course, completely opposed to the legalisation of mind-expanding substances.

Frequent sightings of UFOs and abductions, transports and probings cause Earthlings to realise the ultimate unimportance of life here on earth with its nationalism, racialism, sexism, genderisms and all its other isms, and the vitality of mind-blowing insights into multidimensional, multiversal, and ultimately transmental realities beyond the comprehension of reactionary Squares who have never experienced alternate mental universes and are, hence, bound to their "real"-estate localities.

Legalisation of cannabis will free the national Australian consciousness to explore entirely new exciting concepts of the very notion of "legality" itself. Example: the inequitable notion of "private ownership" can be enlightened and ultimately upgraded into equitability.

I've saved the best for last.

When marijuana becomes legal, it will become popular. Although many will be satisfied just to carry-on with THC as their reality-transforming agent, some dull minds "won't get it", marijuana having failed expand their restricted conscientiousness. Also some enlightened minds starting to expand, will aspire to further expansion. Thankfully, Mother Nature and The Great Universe have supplied a substantial range of more powerful natural and derived products, including miraculous fungi, to provide the necessary gateway to increased Ultimate Reality. At the moment, narrow-minded self-righteous, prudish, self-satisfied, smug, blue-nosed, holier-than-thou conservatives have made these mind-expanding substances illegal. But that can change.

Let no legislation impede ultimate mental independence: Legalise Marijuana Now.
